

Advertisement - scroll for more content

Home Product Reviews Video Games Tech Tips Reviewed.com Inequity in Silicon Valley

Advertisement

Worried about your kid's screen time? Parenting experts weigh in due to social media, tech

CORAL MURPHY | USA TODAY

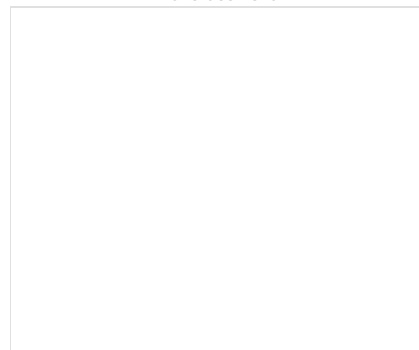

How much screen time is too much screen time is a question the Rivera family has grappled with as they raise their children.

Leroy Rivera is a 34-year-old father living in The Bronx, New York, with his wife and two children, who are 13 and 2. They have both set screen time rules for their children because they recognize the negative effects it might have on the long run.

“If you have social media, and you see people doing things differently than you are, there’s going to be a mental effect because you’re always going to compare yourself,” Rivera told USA TODAY.

The fear of screen dependence getting out of control is echoed across America. A recent Pew Research Center survey shows that over 71% of parents in the U.S. with children under the age of 12 said they are concerned their child is spending too much time in front of a screen.

Advertisement

Share your feedback to help improve our site!

More Stories

Our new reality, with many schools across the country shifting to beginning the academic year with remote learning, is that children will be continuing to spend more time with technology – for work, play and basic interaction.

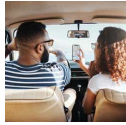

Facebook busts Chinese influence network ahead of midterm elections

Tech

5 ways to get more out of Google with Gmail, Maps, Calendar, and Docs

Komando

NyQuil chicken: Inside the Tiktok trend that garnered FDA warnings

Tech

How to create custom, automatic shortcuts on your smartphone

Problem Solved

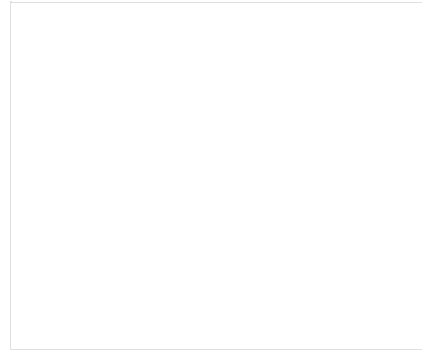

Firefly Aerospace finally reaches orbit with new Alpha rocket

Tech News | 13 hours ago

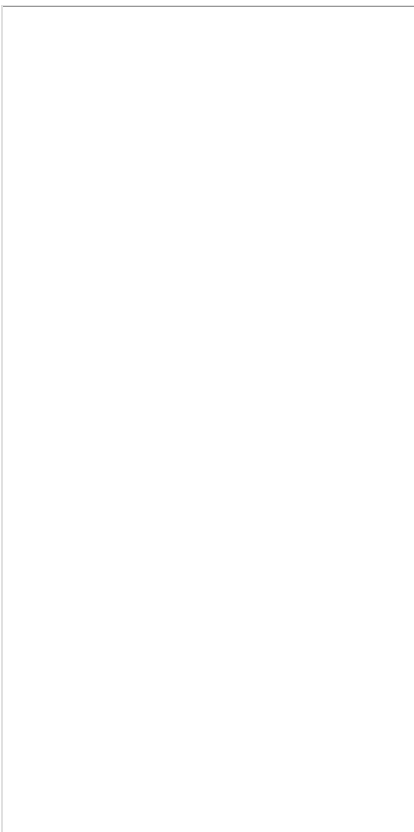

Pandemic life has meant, for many, school via Zoom, FaceTime playdates and so much more gaming. And all of that time staring at screens has many parents wondering: What will the lasting effects of this era be?

Advertisement

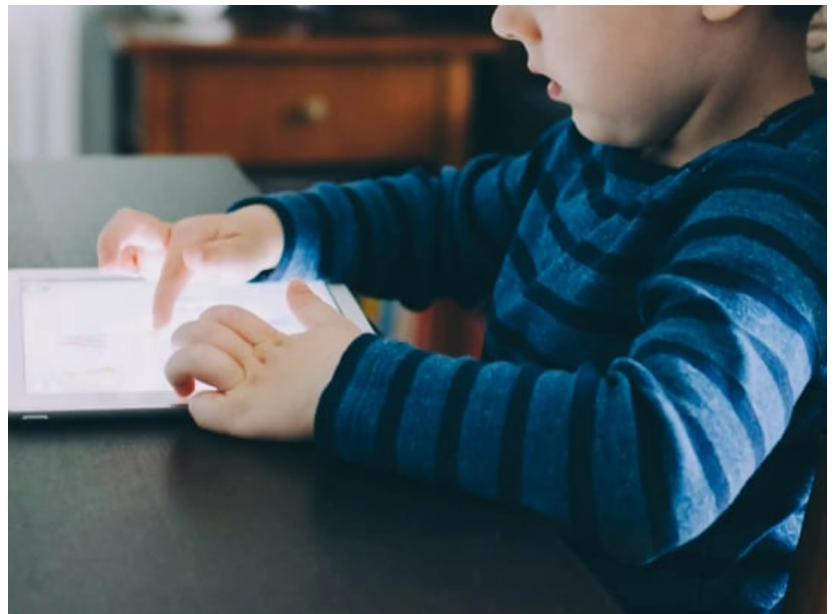

Advertisement

"It's a 24/7 endeavor from the minute they wake up to the minute they fall asleep," said Adina Kalish, a mother with two teenage daughters, 14 and 17, she says are addicted to their phones. "If it's not managed correctly from the get-go, it can get out of control."

Two recent reports released this week – one based on a survey from Pew and another Common Sense Media – honed in on that issue. Navigating the typical ups and downs of raising kids under the weight of coronavirus-related restrictions has left many in uncharted territory, with two-thirds of parents with at least one child under 18 said parenting is harder today than it was 20 years ago, the Pew survey found.

Many mesh router systems come with built-in parental controls. UNSPLASH / KELLY SIKKEMA

But, really, is screen time all bad?

As noted by Common Sense's report on the mental health impacts of technology on young people, that very technology can also be a safety net for teens for those who have access to it, for instance.

"Impacts of digital technology are likely to vary widely between adolescents; those who are vulnerable due to existing mental health problems or household circumstances may be both at heightened risk and have the most to gain from positive and equitable access to the online world," the Common Sense report reads.

Michael Robb, a co-author of the Common Sense report, told USA TODAY that the pandemic exacerbated the inequalities that exist in the usage of digital technologies in America.

"Many of our most vulnerable adolescents, especially those who are Black, Latinx or from lower-income households, are unable to reliably access or receive support in digital spaces," Robb told USA TODAY.

Advertisement

Advertisement

Advertisement

Robb echoes the findings of The Pew Research Center, in which the results also vary among demographics. Half of Black parents and 40% of Hispanic parents surveyed say their child age 11 or younger who watches YouTube videos does so several times a day, compared with 29% of white parents.

(And note that the Pew survey was conducted in early March, before many of the stay-at-home orders and school closures across the country really took effect, leaving America's children much more screen-dependent for education, entertainment and even basic human connection.)

For John Calderon, in Bayamón, Puerto Rico, excessive screen time is negatively affecting the way his 19- and 15-year-old children interact with others now that they prefer the screen over a conversation. However, Calderon says that he's seen an improvement on the ways it can help his children learn.

"The world is so much smaller now," Calderon told USA TODAY. "Because of this technology, my kids are now exposed to other cultures and can learn from them."

For the Rivera family, technology has served as a safety net for their daughter during COVID-19.

"During COVID, a lot of my daughter's friends moved away, and she didn't get a chance to say goodbye," Rivera said. "With her phone, it's helped her keep in touch with them."

How is your family balancing screen use? Share your experience with us on Twitter at @usatodaytech.

DIG DEEPER

WFH? We got you

- How to stage a good video meeting? Put on a show
- Body language: It could affect how you come across to co-workers
- For video meetings, the eyes have it. How to make a better impression.
- Can 5G help make it easier to work from home?

Advertisement

0:45 | 0:57

The 10 best TV shows so far in 2020, from 'Upload' to 'Jeopardy! Greatest of All Time'

2020 has given us some quality television like the "Jeopardy!" tournament that pitted its top three players against each other.

USA TODAY

AD CONTENT

Sponsored Links by Taboola

The Secret Behind Babbel: An Expert Explains Why This App Is the Best for Learning a New Language
Babbel

Brussels: Unsold Never-Driven Cars Now Almost Being Given Away: See Prices
SUV Cheap | Search Ads

If Your Cat Bites You, Here's What It Really Means
Handy Tricks

Found a New Car that Was Embedded 50 Years Ago! They Were Speechless when They Learned the Condition of The Car
Trips-Shop.com

Family Adopts A New Dog - When Vet Sees It He Calls The Police
WorldFamillys.com

20 Really Beautiful Places for Tourists on Low Budget
TripOnMag.com

Advertisement

Help · Terms of Service · Your California Privacy Rights/Privacy Policy · Privacy Policy · Site Map · Accessibility · Our Ethical Principles · Manage Cookies

© Copyright Gannett 2022